European Music School Symposium

Music Schools – Masters of Collaboration?

Creating Interfaces in Music Education Systems

Sound music education requires diverse educational settings, manifold musical experiences and different institutional options. Music schools have to cooperate with partners to enable every child and adolescent to reach their individual musical goals.

Music schools collaborate with compulsory schools to reach out to all children, with music universities to promote highly talented students, with music associations to offer their students different musical experiences and practice, with social institutions to deepen mutual musical experiences, with other arts to initiate creative and innovative interdisciplinary learnings, with cultural organizations, orchestras and many more.

Keynotes (Peter Renshaw, Wolfgang Lessing, Stefan Gies), panel discussions and diverse presentations from many European countries encourage a creative and innovative inter- and trans-disciplinary exchange between European experts, scholars and academics to inspire and foster the further development of music schools. The symposium offers a powerful platform for new perspectives on broad accessible music education and will be essential for all those involved in music school development.
